NECRO HELD FOR MURDER OF ROXBURY

Coroner's Jury After Hearing All the Evidence Concerning the Killing of the Tea Taster in the Bronx Returned Verdict Against Charles Jackson.

MISS THOMASCH ONCE DESCRIBED THE ASSAULT.

She Did Not Seem So Positive as Formerly in Her Identification, but Watch Pawned by Prisoner Was Shown to Have Been Worn by Roxbury.

the evidence concerning the murder Charles W. Roxbury, while he was valking with Miss Lillian Thomasch in the Bronx on July 10, rendered a verdict this afternoon holding Charles Jackson, the negro suspect, responsible for The verdict read as follows:

"We find that Charles W. Roxbury same to his death from shock, compound fracture of the skull and hemorrhages as the result of an assault made upon him for the purpose of robbery, committed near One Hundred and Sixty-sixth street and River avenue, on the night of July 10 by Charles Jackson, whom we believe be guilty of the murder of said Charles W. Roxbury."

Jackson was held by Coroner Berry and remanded to the Tombs without ball. Miss Thomasch on Stand.

efore the case was given to the jury Miss Lillian Thomasch went on the stand and again told the story of the murder of Roxbury while he was walk-ing with her through River avenue, betknown as Lover's Lane.

Miss Thomasch declared that the man who held them up on the night of the tragedy resembled the prisoner Charles Jackson, who pawned Mr. Roxbury's watch.

"Stand up." Coroner Berry said to the prisoner. The negro arose, and faced the witness. He was plainly agitated. 'Is that the man who assaulted Mr. Roxbury?" the Coroner asked of the

Miss Thomasch replied. "I saw him at the station-house and picked him out of a crowd. I could not see whether the highwayman was black or white." Miss Thomasch then told how she had met Mr. Roxbury at 7.35 o'clock on the Ninth avenue "L" station at Forty second street. When they art to Har-and nine other prominent borough residents.

Mrs. Gibson said that her son had dined with her on the fatal night and that she had loaned him two five-dollar bills.

"He said to me: 'Jackson, here is a gold watch. Go and pawn it.' I said to him: 'Where did you get it, Slim?' He said to me: 'Never mind.' I said: 'Why don't you pawn it yourself?' He said for me to do as I was told. I took the watch and pawned it for 81s, receiving a $10 and a $5 bill. Slim told me to keep $10 for myself and also the ticket. When I got home I put the ticket in the drawer and put the $10 in my pocket.''

Continuing, O'Nell said that he had questioned Jackson very carefully but could get nothing from him except about places that "Slim" frequented. Detectives visited these places but could find no one who had ever heard of "Slim."

Lawyer Benjamin Steinhardt took another step in his fight to stop betting on the race tracks to-day. He secured from Justice Cimsted in the Court of Special Sessions a warrant for one of the race track Pinkerton force on a charge of oppression. Mr. Steinhardt refuses to give the name of the man for whom the warrant was issued.

In addition Mr. Steinhardt asked for subpoenas commanding August Belmont and the other memiliers of the State Racing Commission to appear at the hearing of Operative Hermann, of the Pinkerton force, who was arrested last week charged with oppression at the Morris Park track. The demand for subpoenas was refused.

arrived here to-day and sailed in to beat the Quakers. If was 98 degrees in the shade when Bob Emsile, who seems to be following the Giants all over, called "Batter up!" and George Browne for the sixtieth time had first crack. Browne waited the limit and hung around first base until Van Heitren salted a fly over second that sent Browne skipping to third. McGann tried to rip the cover off and ended by fanning. Sandow Mertes swung with all his might and hoisted a terrific drive in left that Barry nailed. Browne scored and Van reached second. After nibbiles at half a dozen fouls, Babb hit a Texas League coer second, scoring Van Haltren, and on a wild throw home landed in third. Lander flied out. Two runs.
